THE INDIFFERENCE OF NEW YORK.

New Yorkers are always hearing some charge or other brought against their fair city. Bostonians call it ugly, Philadelphians restless, Kansans too old, Europeans too new. It is everything from an effete Nineteenth to a raw boom town, and of course our English cousins think it is in any case too snacking. The New Yorker doesn't happen to be troubled much by these attributions, but they often set him thinking, and sometimes he muses and speculates on how he could in a word or two, describe his own city.

"Cosmopolitanism has often been put forward as the most striking trait of New York, and of course with truth as far as the actual makeup of the population is concerned. The second German city in the world, an Italian city of goodly proportions, a haven of Russians, Poles, Hungs, Czechs, Greeks, even the abode of a considerable number of the home-loving French, not to forget an American colony also, New York is undeniably cosmopolitan. Lately one has been hearing it called by some of its more thoughtful citizens "Indifferent."

The indifference in question has shown itself during the last few months in some striking instances. For instance, recently Mrs. Bernard Shaw landed here and spent several days within our gates, and yet the newspaper publicity connected with the visit was so small as to be almost negligible. The lady in question is the wife of one of the most conspicuous of living men of letters, and probably the best known contemporary playwright using the English language, and she has some claims to attention as a writer herself. Ten years ago her visit to New York would certainly have brought forth columns in the daily papers. Again, one hears it asked, "Has William Butler Yeats been here this winter? Is he in America with the Irish players? Is Lady Gregory here?" Answers differ. No one seems to know exactly. Time was when the visit to New York of Yeats, or even of Lady Gregory would have been an event. Now about the only person whose presence or absence the man in the street can tell you of with a certainty is Caruso. But Enrico Caruso is now a local institution. And, as Enrico Caruso was once of Naples, behold another proof of New York cosmopolitanism!
